Nuvo Ritmo: The Surround-Sound System for In Utero Lifestyles

by Tim Stevens — Jan 15th 2010 at 11:00AM

We've seen some crazy baby tech in the past, including a Linux-powered baby rocker and a supposed cry translator. We've even seen an MP3 player belt that promised to help you literally rock your baby to sleep, and apparently it was such a breakout success that it inspired the creation of a second, the the Nuvo Ritmo.

It too is a speaker belt that connects to your MP3 player. This one, however, splits in the middle, surrounding your baby with sound -- surely tinny sound given the tiny speakers and seeming lack of an amplifier. The strap Velcros onto the mother's back and promises to deliver a "sound like love" and, indeed, the demonstration video below presents a lovely, mellow world of gentle tunes -- but we're not entirely sure that's accurate. Don't listen to us, though. We're all stuck in the cold, harsh reality. From: [Nuvo, via: Engadget]

Anything you input to the developing baby goes directly into its DNA. So rather than tune it into some mechanical sounds, just love the baby, talk to the baby, massage the baby. Your every thought and emotion is felt by the baby and registers as part of its programming for life. So if you want a happy healthy baby, you've got to be happy and healthy yourself - surround yourself with beautiful things, inspiring things. Avoid negative programming. The baby has to way to filter out bad stuff like fear or worry or hatred or trauma. It takes it all in and everything in those 9 months become a part of the baby's future life. A pregnant woman can design the type of person that child will be by carefully choosing her inner as well as her outer environment for those months. It's the biggest responsibility we have as women and 99% go about it unconsciously...tsk.
